Let's Start!

Pronunciation Spot: Let's find out if Irwin can sort things out!

Learning Outcome

Exchange information about unlikely events or fairly certain conditions that will be fulfilled in the present, past or future in spoken or written texts and in work and social contexts.

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about people's personalities, love and marriage.
- I can use proper intonation in non-final thought groups.
- I can change emphasis by changing word order.

Ask your partner:

- Do you remember the last time you were in an argument? What was it about?
- In your opinion, what is the best way to resolve an argument?

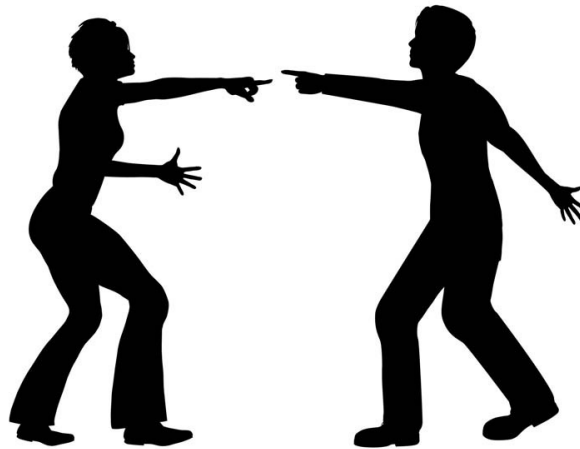

Let's Explore!

Stephen and Elizabeth are having a fight. Will they make up?

* To "make up" means to reconcile.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Stephen had a terrible fight with his girlfriend Elizabeth. He regretted it the moment he got home. What exactly the cause of the problem was, he did not know. Regardless, he called Elizabeth to apologize and to beg her forgiveness, but she refused to speak to him. It seemed as though all possible options had been exhausted, so what Stephen did was send his friend Irwin to talk to Elizabeth. When Irwin came back, he gave Stephen the following report:

I had a long talk with Elizabeth. We talked about how you are always so inconsiderate, how she always puts up with your guff, and how you always get on her nerves. What she hates most is your constant nagging. She mentioned that you were often distant and cold. As to where all of this animosity is coming from, she could not say.

I asked her whether she was sick of your hostility, if she wanted to try to forget about you and whether she was certain that she wouldn't have any regrets. She said that she wasn't sure, and that she would need a bit of time to think about it. I asked her whether she would miss you, and if she still loved you despite all of the things you had done. Again she said that she didn't know for certain. I asked her whether she wanted you to call her, if she had a message for you, and why she was so enraged. Once more, she couldn't give me a straight answer. I asked her if she wanted to break up with you and whether she was interested in someone else. She gave me another vague response.

I was out of ideas, so finally I asked her if she would like to go out with me next week. At last I got a clear answer. She said yes!

Extension Activity

Form a few long sentences.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Make a chart with four headings: weekend plans, groceries, favorite activities, and household chores.
- Under each heading, write at least five things that correspond with that category.
- Convert each heading into a long sentence (e.g. This weekend, I will go to the park, go shopping, eat a hamburger and watch TV.)
- Practice saying the sentences with a partner, focusing on intonation.

Self-Assessment

Yes

No

I make lists containing at least five items.

- hostility (noun): unfriendliness or opposition
e.g. I asked her whether she was sick of your hostility.
- inconsiderate (adjective): thoughtless
e.g. We talked about how you are always so inconsiderate.

Learning Points

Intonation in Non-Final Thought Groups

A thought group is a group of words that form a grammatical unit. It is often a phrase, clause or chunk of words that have a logical meaning. Each thought group can have its own intonation pattern.

When you say a long sentence, you break the sentence into smaller thought groups. This makes it easier for the listener to understand what you are saying.

For example:

Whenever I do my work, // I get sleepy // and then I don't finish // what I was supposed to have done.

As you read this sentence, your intonation should partially fall at the end of the each thought group, except for the final one, when your voice falls to indicate that you are finished.

Practice reading these sentences from the text:

Examples:

- Regardless, he called his girlfriend to apologize, and to beg her forgiveness, but she refused to speak to him.
- We talked about how you are always so inconsiderate, how she always puts up with your guff, and how you always get on her nerves.
- I asked her whether she was sick of your hostility, if she wanted to try to forget about you and whether she was certain that she wouldn't have any regrets.
- I asked her whether she would miss you, and if she still loved you despite all of the things you had done.
- I asked her whether she wanted you to call her, if she had a message for you, and why she was so enraged.

Learning Points

Changing Emphasis

The way you order clauses and words within sentences can change the way the idea is presented and stressed. You can use these strategies to emphasize certain elements that you're trying to communicate.

Passive constructions change the way information is presented to the reader by changing the emphasis from who/what does the action in a sentence to who/what receives the action.

New non-chemical cleaners have been put out by Acme.

Inversion means that the natural word order of a sentence has been changed by placing a prepositional phrase before the verb, which places emphasis on it. In this type of construction, both the prepositional phrase and the verb are placed before the subject.

Suddenly down she fell!

Across the pavement went all of her books.*

Fronting means changing the natural order of a sentence so that a clause, other than the main clause, comes first.

He won't tell me where we are going.

Where we are going, he won't tell me.*

Time phrases go in different parts of a sentence. They are put first when the time is important in the context.

At midnight, all of the bells began to ring.*

What clauses

What clauses commonly have verbs such as need, want, like, hate in them.

I hate the snow.

What I hate is the snow.*

You need a vacation.

What you need is a vacation.*

Examples:

- What exactly the cause of the problem was, he did not know.
- It seemed as though all possible options had been exhausted.
- What she hates most is your constant nagging.
- As to where all of this animosity is coming from, she could not say.
